Module 1 Discussion: The Big Picture

I am studying global health history, concentrating on public health policies. Originally from Nairobi, Kenya, my background enriches my understanding of health disparities and solutions.

After completing my education, I envision a career in public health, explicitly aiming to work with international organizations like the World Health Organization or UNICEF. I aim to contribute to global health policy development and implementation, focusing on reducing health inequities and improving access to healthcare worldwide. This career path combines my passion for social justice with my academic background, allowing me to make a tangible impact on global health challenges.

Understanding the global history of health, particularly past pandemics and public health policies, will be crucial in my career in international health policy. Lessons from history will guide my efforts in shaping resilient healthcare systems and policies that preemptively address health inequities. This historical insight will enable me to contribute effectively to initiatives aimed at preventing future health crises on a global scale.

Hey Max, great post! Your connection between your financial significance and global health through economic policies was insightful. It is interesting to consider how financial tools can be used to address health crises. Also, it would be best to consider exploring how digital finance solutions might play a role in future health initiatives.
